Problem: In Article 1 Section 1 of the Constitution it states that the Libertarian Party of Virginia will be referred to as the “Party”, but there are many sections of the Constitution which reference “Libertarian Party of Virginia” or “LPVA”. The national Libertarian Party is also frequently referred to as “National Libertarian Party” and the “constitution and bylaws” of this organization are referenced, despite there being no constitution of the national Libertarian Party.

Solution: Update all references throughout the document to use the “Party” when referring to the Libertarian Party of Virginia. Change the references to the national Libertarian Party so that the N of national is not capitalized (the name is “Libertarian Party” not “National Libertarian Party”). Removes references to the Constitution of the national Libertarian Party.

Benefits: The language of the Constitution will now be internally consistent as well as consistent with the name of the national Libertarian Party and the current state of that organization’s governing documents.
