

A Denver native, Raymon resides in northeast Denver, where he grew up. A product of Denver Public Schools, he graduated from the IB Program of George Washington High School. After attending the Community College of Aurora and CSU-Pueblo, Raymon graduated from Metropolitan State College of Denver (now Metropolitan State University of Denver) with a B.S. in Management.

Raymon has worked for a variety of government organizations including: track coach for the City of Lakewood, elections judge/voter clerk for the City and County of Denver, Property Tax Specialist for Colorado Department of Local Affairs, Tax Examiner for the Colorado Department of Revenue, and Business Analyst for Colorado Department of Revenue.

Raymon plans to use his background to help dismantle our federal tax code and remove waste from each and every federal department. The federal government has a spending problem, not a revenue problem

Doane is pro 2nd Amendment and will refuse to vote for any legislation which limits an American's right to self-defense. All civil liberties matter, and Raymon will stand against any attempts by his colleagues to infringe on the rights of others or to bring war to the shores of nations who have not proved to be a qualified military threat to the United States.

Raymon is excited to have the opportunity to run a statewide campaign and raise the necessary funds to qualify for televised debates. It would be a great honor to win this nomination, and the opportunity should not be taken lightly.
