

Video Games

Well, the makers of offensive video games have done it again, this time taking a crack at the notion of occupation health and safety. The game in question, "Hard Hat Mack" pits Mack, "a real working class hero" against OSHA, Mack's "arch governmental enemy."

In the game, manufactured by Electronics Arts, Mack the worker is trying to do some "honest hard work," in the words of the advertising campaign, constructing buildings in "record-breaking time," only to be penalized by OSHA. The game, and its accompanying advertising campaign present the view that OSHA, the governmental agency responsible for ensuring a safe and healthful workplace, is actually an enemy of workers. But as the Bay Area Committee on Occupational Safety and Health (BACOSH), in Oakland, California has pointed out, as well as perpetuating the labeling of OSHA as the enemy of workers, the game will teach children who play it only that OSHA (an unexplained acronym) is evil.

There has been a recent, dramatic rise in long-distance calls which are billed to federal agencies in Washington. Libertarian blasts plan for zoning

By Carl Langley

South Carolina Bureau Chief

AIKEN - An Aiken County Libertarian said Thursday night members of his party would oppose any efforts to put a countywide zoning ordinance on the books.

Ron Heaton, chairman of the county Libertarian Party and former state Senate candidate, attacked zoning proposals at a meeting of the Aiken County Planning Commission that failed for lack of a quorum.

Heaton, who did not address the commissioners, said afterward that his party would fight zoning on grounds that "it's just another restriction on private property rights."

The Libertarian said such an action would "increase taxes and raise rents" and give government another avenue to travel in "interfering with citizens' rights."

Grace tells Furman graduates they must 'question authority'

Associated Press

GREENVILLE

The federal government is like a baby with "an enormous appetite at one end and no sense of responsibility at the other," according to J. Peter Grace, who chaired a presidential commission on cutting government waste.

President Reagan appointed the Grace Commission, which after two years compiled 21,000 pages of reports on the subject.

The commission found 2,478 ways to save a total of $424 billion during the next three years, Grace said. Reagan has supported the measures proposed by the commission, but Congress must approve 80 percent of those recommendations, he said.

During a speech to Furman University graduates Saturday in Greenville that lasted only about five minutes, Grace said his "message is the federal government is like a little baby, with an enormous appetite at one end and no sense of responsibility at the other."

"And if politicians are the answer, you don't want to know what the question is," he said.

Grace called the mounting federal deficit his generation is leaving the United States "child abuse of the worst order. It is taxation without representation. We're sticking it to the kids' tab. It's intergenerational rape." He said the deficit will total $13 trillion by the year 2000.

Grace called upon graduates to "question authority. That's what we all must do. Public officials are just that.

"They are your servants," he said. "Set yourself free. Don't let government waste your money. Make democracy work. Nobody else can save you."

Grace, who has served as chairman and chief executive officer of W.R. Grace and Co. for 40 years, also received an honorary doctor of laws degree.

The Skeleton Closet

Every dollar spent to comply with Federal regulations is a dollar that is not available for investing in new job-creating machinery and hiring for new workers.

We first must recognize that the problem with the U.S. economy is swollen, inefficient government, needless regulation, too much taxation, too much printing press money. ... We must keep the rate of growth of government spending at reasonable and prudent levels. ... We must establish a stable, sound, and predictable monetary policy.

The Carter record is a litany of despair, of broken trusts, of sacred promises abandoned and forgotten.

For decades, we have piled deficit upon deficit, mortgaging our future and our children's future for the temporary convenience of the present. To continue this trend is to guarantee tremendous social, cultural, political and economic upheavals. — (Inaugural Address.)

A LETTER WHICH WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED BY A "PEACE" ZINE

Suppose I told you that there is in this country a government program that takes away from working people about 1/7 of the value of their work (although wealthier people are treated more leniently), in a way that they are not allowed to earn a living if they do not give up this amount - essentially one day's livelihood out of every week - for which they are essentially forced into slave labor? Suppose I told you further that this is one of the most racist of all public programs, in that it transfers massive amounts of money from nonwhite payers to white recipients? Suppose I also told you that this program transfers money from the poor to the well-off? Finally, suppose I told you that this has been going on for more than 50 years, and I have never heard any Peace or Social Justice group or publication say a word against it?

It makes you wonder, doesn't it?

What I have just described is Social Security. It currently takes at least 14% of the worker's net income, because the worker really pays the "employer's share" as his labor must cover all the employer's costs. The wealthy and self-employed pay at a lower percentage. It is totally compulsory, with no guarantee of any benefits. Since it is a tax on work, it is essentially a form of slavery. It transfers money from nonwhites to whites, since most nonwhites (except Orientals) do not live to be 65 and retire. It transfers money from the poor to the well-off, because they live longer, because they draw higher benefits, and because they can take advantage of the tax benefits, which are useless to the poor.

What does this have to do with Peace? If a government wages war against its own citizens, is it any less war? What does this have to do with Justice? If a government deprives the worker of the fruits of his labor - always under the pretext of "helping the needy" while it does the exact opposite - is this not unjust?

Why am I telling you all this?

The first time was at the atomic energy plant at Aldermaston, Berks. Boyle says: "I took a film crew and quite openly filmed the entrance at Aldermaston."

"A bus was dropping passengers at the plant's door when a car screamed up and some burly men dragged us inside and interrogated us until the sun went down and we could no longer film."

Sentries on guard took the whole crew into the guardroom for questioning.

Two hours later they were released—and no charges were made.

Sleeping-tax revenues should go for rest areas

The question of how sleeping-tax revenue should be spent to promote tourism is being discussed.

I suggest that priority be given to developing additional rest areas on our major tourist-traveled highways.

Tourists approaching our major cities and resort areas might welcome a "relief" before entering congested areas.

A bulletin board-type map of the areas would also help to orient travelers.

I often wonder what tourists think about South Carolina when they see a sign saying "Rest area — no facilities."

Snow Cone Stand Nearly Clear of City Bureaucrats

By VIC MacDONALD
City Editor

It is a child's dream — an ice cold snow cone on a hot summer day.

And Lillian Hughee had the idea to bring the summertime treat to the kids on Oakland Avenue.

Until the bureaucrats got involved. The bureaucrats brought a request to sell snow cones from 503 Oakland Ave. to Florence City Council on Monday.

Only by the time it got to council, the "child's dream" had become a "Conditional Use Permit for Sale of Snow Cones in an Multi-Family Zone at 503 Oakland Avenue."

The city's Planning and Development Department gave council members three pages of documents about the snow cone controversy. The pages included a letter outlining their objections to the snow cones sale, a letter to the Planning Commission opposing the snow cone sale and a map of the area of Oakland Avenue where the cones would be sold.

In its letter to council, the P and D staff said the Planning Commission could approve something not usually allowed in a residential area.

"If the activity would be an asset to the neighborhood and when operated under specific conditions that the Planning Commission approves, the use may be permitted," the letter says.

The Planning Commission approved the permit on May 28. Conditions included that the litter be cleaned up daily, the health department would inspect the operation and "valid neighborhood complaints would lead to closing the operation."

But, the P and D staff's letter points out that the City Council can overrule the Planning Commission and proceeds to tell why the council should ban snow cone sales on Oakland Avenue.

These are the two reasons the P and D staff gave for opposing the snow cone sale:

"...it is impossible to assure that the snow cones will be safe to eat, clean, etc. It is very difficult to assure that the stand will not become a hangout for youth who cause problems for the neighbors."

"...permitting a stand in the front yard, even if seasonal, is considered permitting an accessory use in the front yard. This is not permitted in front yard of Multifamily or Residential zones."

Selling "produce" is allowed in nonresidential areas but not in residential areas, the staff's letter says.

"The Planning Commission likened a snow cone stand to children selling lemonade," the staff told council, "but the latter is usually done for a few hours for on day only. The trucks that sell snow cones move around and do not attract large crowds by being stationary for hours at a time."

But the City Council turned out to be snow cone fans and went along with the "kids' operation like a lemonade stand" theory. The agreed to let the stand operate until August 31.

Mrs. Hughee said she was going to get a business license for the snow cone stand Wednesday afternoon. It will cost $50.

"I've never done this kind of thing before," she said of the summertime enterprise. "It was something the kids and I wanted to do to stay motivated during the summer. It's better than having them roam the streets."

Mrs. Hughee will be assisted by her child and two children who live with her. The snow cone stand is portable, but Mrs. Hughee said it will likely stay in her front yard.

"There are lots of children in the neighborhood and most of them play in my backyard," she said. "It's something we wanted to do for them."

Often it is difficult to analyze the costs and revenues of government projects because of their enormity and because of such practices as comingling and diffusing of revenues and/or costs.

In the late 1950s there occurred in a city where I lived a microcosm of what transpires when government undertakes to perform an activity so as to "protect the public from exploitation".

A privately owned toll bridge, known locally as "the nickel bridge" because the toll was 5¢, was the shortest route between downtown and the main residential area, which was on the other side of a river. The family that owned the bridge maintained it out of the 5¢ tolls and allegedly lived quite well on the remaining income. Those in political power managed to force the owners to sell the bridge to "the public" as represented by the city, and floated a bond issue so the public could pay for it.

Tolls then had to be doubled to 10¢ to cover, in addition to maintenance, interest on the bonds and costs of a fund to retire the bond issue. Thus the nickel bridge became a dime bridge in the name of protect the bridge-using public from exploitation.

● As we have seen in our discussion... of the fertility of freedom, the restriction of economic freedom may inhibit individuals from discovering opportunities they might have noticed had they been free to exploit them. Loss of freedom may thus lower individual and social achievement without anyone's realizing what has been lost or not achieved. A free society is fertile and creative in the sense that its freedom generates alertness to possibilities that may be of use to society; a restriction on the freedom of a society numbs such alertness and blinds society to possibilities of social improvement.

Russian Comedian Finds Capitalist Success in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — As Yakov Smirnoff tells it, there's no such thing as an American Express card in the Soviet Union. But they do give you Russian Express — "Don't leave home!"

Smirnoff had a recent crowd at Caroline's comedy club in Manhattan rolling with laughter from his first words until his finale, a rousing Cossack dance performed in bright red pants and a white blouse. The costume, he said, was "made in Poland. But not with union labor!"

Bearded and 34, he regaled the audience with stories about a comedian who was successful in the Soviet Union, immigrated to the United States in 1977, learned with difficulty to cope in a new land and became a success. He was talking about himself.

When Smirnoff applied for an emigration visa, he was fired and waited jobless for two years until he could leave, he said in an interview. On stage, he laughs about it.

"One night about 3 o'clock in the morning, there is a knock on the door. I said, 'Who is there?' They said, 'Mailmen.' I opened the door and there are two guys in trench coats. One said, 'Why do you want to leave Soviet Union?' I said, 'Because in America they don't deliver mail at 3 o'clock.'"

He and his parents obtained their visas and headed West.

"It was my first time in American plane. ... Soviet planes are different. The rest rooms are outside. It's horrible when you are facing the wrong way.

"Then I got to New York. ... I walked out of the airport, and saw my name written, Smirnoff: 'America loves Smirnoff.' I said to myself, 'What a country!'"

"It's fun being in this country, sometimes it isn't easy, like for example adjusting to food. You know, it's hard because you have it," he says, and is interrupted by laughter. "Well, this is humorous because you know we don't have much food in Russia."

"I went into a supermarket and I never see so much food in my life. On every shelf, it says, 'Try this, try this, try this.' Americans are so generous. By the time I finished my shopping, I was stuffed."

Language was a major problem for Smirnoff, who did not speak English.

"I had to learn your language. So I lock myself in a room and watch television for three months. Then I realized it was a Spanish station. The only job I could get was body and fender work," he told the audience.

"People told me, don't worry, you learn pidgin English and you'll be fine. So I go to parks. And I learn to go 'coo' 'coo,'" he said, bobbing his head like a pigeon.

On stage, Smirnoff thickens his accent and limits his vocabulary for effect. However, his English is very good. In an interview, he said he learned the language the hard way.

He got a job as a busboy at Grossinger's, a Catskills resort known for entertainment. "I would listen to the comedians. And then I told jokes to my customers. I could tell how successful I was by how many tips I got," he said.

Eight years later, he measures success in terms of his automobiles — a Rolls-Royce and a Mercedes sports car — the Los Angeles homes he bought for himself and his parents and the $7,500 he can make for a one-night club appearance.

He has appeared in three movies, "Moscow on the Hudson," "Brewster's Millions" and "Buckaroo Bonzai," and in the TV comedy series, "Night Court."

Many of his jokes are drawn from underground Soviet humor, wry comments on shortages and politics that never seem to bore his American audience. Midway through the act, he opens the floor to questions, and most concern the old country.

The life of a comedian is "hard in the Soviet Union because you have to write up your material and you send it to Department of Joke ... Department of Joke sends it to Moscow to the big Department of Joke called Politburo. They send it back to you. You have to stay with the script."

Moslem preachers to be tried for subversion

JAKARTA (JP): Two moslem preachers will soon be brought before the court on subversion charges ranging from inciting the public and stirring up resentment which led to last September's bloody riots in Tanjung Priok port.

Suara Karya, quoting a source in North Jakarta district court, reported, Tuesday, that the court has received trial dossiers on Haj Salim Kadar, 50, and Yayan Hendrayana, 35, and will start their treason trial on July 20.

North Jakarta district court chief, Suharto, confirmed the court has set up teams of panels to handel legal proceedings. The trials will be chaired by Judge Mrs. Nielma Salim and Mansyur Idris. Indictments will be made by state prosecutor Gatot Hendrarto and Basrief Arief.

The source said Kadar, a religious figure and chairman of the Indonesian preacher's association (K.M.I.), and Hendrayana, an associate lecturer at Islamic College (P.T.D.I.) and also executive of K.M.I., throught their "alleged extreme" sermons on various occasions instigated moslems, to denounce Pancasila as the state philosophy.

The preachers also opposed the concept of family planning and the implementation of Pancasila as a basic ideology for all mass organizations which was just approved by parliament and accused government of planning to depoliticize moslems in a scheme to form a secular state.

Kadar and Hendrayana, the source said, were also responsible for the Sept. 12 bloody riots in Tanjung Priok harbor area that killed 30 people and injured 53 others. The two reportedly had given inflammatory speeches on Jl. Koja, Tanjung Priok, shortly before the riots broke out and urged the audience to march to the police station in order to release four detainees in police custody.
